

Arrival in

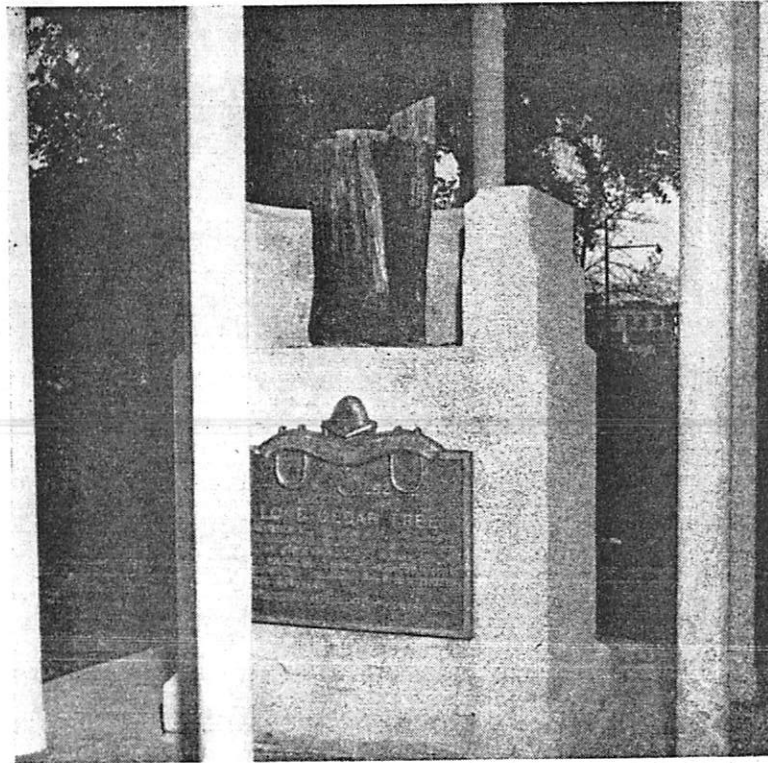

Great Salt Lake Valley

Pioneers Entering Salt Lake Valley, 1847

P. 184

LONE CEDAR TREE — NO. 262

Although willows grew along the banks of the streams a Lone Cedar Tree near this spot became Utah's first famous landmark. Someone in a moment of thoughtlessness cut it down, leaving only the stump which is a part of this monument. "In the glory of my prime I was the pioneer's friend."

Central Company

"I am the Cedar tree. When the first men came through the mountains they saw me and made their trail to me. It was around me they decided to build a city. When they came I was at the zenith of my glory. I stood on a sturdy trunk, a dense mass of rich green rising in imposing dignity high above the gray-green sage. When they came in long trains, one after another, week after week, season after season, the tracks they made alongside of me became a part of the overland trail. I was the token of the end of the long journey. At that time strange straight lines were drawn in all directions and streets were given numbers, but my street retained a name. The people called it Emigration street because it was the original thoroughfare